

A FEW WORDS AT THE BELL

Many people that we love, including our brother Mark Marra and his extended family, have worked to make this day happen, to restore our bell and place it in a tower so that the bell could once again call us to come and worship the God of love.

This morning we remember them, we remember their work, and we remember the God who is love.

It's great to have a bell ringing at American each Sunday morning, but more than that, the bell reminds us of our history, our heritage, and the many blessings God has given us over the years.

And the tower itself reminds us of the cross of Christ and that the God who would send His Son to die for us will surely see to it that we have a future as well.

So let the bell represent the past, let it represent the life we have together at American Reformed Church today, and let it represent our hope that God will bless us for years to come.

Listen now as the bell calls us to come together as God's people to worship Him.
